3

Relocate the Center and Station as desired:
• Simply unplug the Center or Station and power them up in your preferred rooms.
• You will be able to stream* the hard disk music between the Center and Station

IMPORTANT!
• Avoid installing in between thick walls. Separating the Center and Station by 2 or more walls may cause poor streaming connection.
• For better Wi-Fi reception, you can adjust the Wi-Fi antenna, or adjust the location of the Center and Station (e.g. shorten the distance between the Center and Station).

  📶 : indicates maximum reception; 📡 : indicates minimum reception

• For wall mounting, please refer to the User Manual, Appendix: How to mount your Station onto walls. You may need assistance from a qualified service personnel.

* Streaming is the process in which data (music in this case) is transferred from one device to another device or many other devices.

C FAQ

Most Frequently Asked Questions

About the Environment

Q: Is there a maximum distance of transmission between Philips Wireless Music Center and Stations for effective streaming?

A: Yes. The maximum distance of Wi-Fi transmission is 250m measured in open spaces. However, in a home environment, there solid obstacles such as walls and doors are present, the effective transmission distance is significantly reduced to approximately 50 -100m. Try to re-position the sets if you experience transmission problems.

Q: Do I need a computer or home network to use Philips Wireless Music Center and Station?

A: No. Philips Wireless Music Center and Station are designed to work independent of the computer. You can record music from CDs to the music library of the Center's (hard disk), and stream music to the Stations without any computer or home networking structure.

About Music Management

Q: What is Philips Wireless Audio Device Manager (WADM)?

A: WADM serves to help you manage network settings, upgrade Firmware etc. For details, see the manual Connect to your PC and WADM help file.

Q: Is Philips Wireless Music Station upgradeable?

A: Yes, Philips Wireless Music Station is software upgradeable, which means that it is ready for future functional upgrades if available. Check our website regularly for the latest news on new features and improvements at http://www.philips.com/support
